Dhayah Fort

Capacity: 25

Dhayah Fort, the UAE's last hilltop fort, sits on the UNESCO World Heritage Tentative List, surrounded by the mountains and date wadis of Ras Al Khaimah. This 19th-century mud-brick fortress, restored in the 1990s, stands on a 70-meter hill, offering sweeping views over palm groves to Oman and the sea. The fort was a strategic defense site and the center of the 1819 battle between British forces and local Qawasim tribes.

At the hill's base are the ruins of a larger fort and 12 ancient Wadi Suq tombs (2000–1300 BC), revealing impressive Southeast Arabian funerary practices. Managed by the Ras Al Khaimah Department of Antiquities, plans are underway to transform the area into an archaeology park. Visitors should note that the rocky, unlit climb is best attempted during daylight hours and is not accessible to those with limited mobility.

Al Jazeera Al Hamra Heritage Village

Capacity: 250 (Fort) 100 (Baraha) 50 (Houses) 30 (Majlis)

Between the mountains, desert, and coastline.

Al Jazeera Al Hamra is the last intact pearling village in the UAE. It was founded in the 17th century by the Za'ab tribe within Ras Al Khaimah's Al Qasimi ruling dynasty. Due to the rich color of its sands, it earned the name "the red island." The village remained a tidal island surrounded by a shallow marshland (sabkha) until it was connected to the mainland in the late 1970s.

The village thrived on pearl diving, fishing, boat building, and date farming for centuries. By the early 20th century, it had grown to around 500 houses, supporting a population of 2,500 to 3,000. Its lively souq became a key commercial hub in the region, contributing to the village's prosperity. The village was divided into distinct quarters based on family groups: the larger southern quarter, Al Manakh, and the smaller northern quarter, Umm Awaimir, along with Al Sharqi, Al Mayan, Al Gharbi, Al Bateh, and Al Buloosh, according to oral tradition.
